Program Update

Carol McCormick, Associate Administrator for Personal Health spoke about the new Nurse-Family Partnership program. Carol reported the program is finally fully staffed with two full-time nurses, one part-time supervisor and one part-time data entry person. Nurse-Family Partnership is an evidence-based program designed to serve first time mothers and has been providing services for more than 40 years nationally and 20 years in Washington state. Carol also stated that this program has the best statistical outcomes when compared to other home-visiting programs. Carol cited statistics that show an impressive 5-fold return on investment. Carol stated that the vision for the NFP program is to have healthy children, families that thrive and communities that prosper, and to break the cycle of poverty. The keys goals for this program are to improve pregnancy outcomes, child health and development, and improve the economic self-sufficiency of the family.

New Business

Barry Kling, Administrator and Environmental Health Director, raised an issue related to the On-Site Program. He provided some background on the process of approving a septic system. He stated that when an on-site septic system is to be installed on a property, one or more test holes are usually dug on the property to determine the soil characteristics, which are critical to septic system design. The CDHD On-Site program believes it is best for CDHD staff to see the open test hole(s) in person, as part of a site assessment done prior to further septic system development. An early assessment of this kind by CDHD staff can prevent problems later in the process, since this also gives CDHD an opportunity to observe other site characteristics, such as the location of steep areas not suitable for a drain field. Kling shared the relevant WAC citation (WAC 246-272A-0260), which authorizes the Health Officer (through designated staff) to visit sites for this purpose. CDHD requires septic system installers or designers to assure that the test holes are left open and for CDHD inspection for up to two business days for evaluation, after which they can be covered even if CDHD has not been able to visit the site (which is unusual). CDHD counts Fridays as a business day for this purpose. In the event CDHD is unable to visit the site while the test hole(s) are open, a site visit is made during final installation, which is an option also authorized in WAC 246-272A-0260. Several other public health jurisdictions in the state use this approach.

Some septic installers apparently believe they acquire additional legal liability by leaving a test hole open for a day or two, although no specific instances of liability have been identified involving a properly marked test hole. At least one designer has asked CDHD to clarify that in leaving a hole open they are just doing what the Health District requires. After some discussion the Board agreed that the suggested draft motion should specify the period of time a test hole must remain open, since it is important not to unduly delay construction projects, and the following motion was made by Jill Thompson, Waterville City Council, and seconded by Kevin Overbay, Chelan County Commissioner:

The Chelan-Douglas Board of Health finds that WAC 246-272A-0260, as it exists today, gives the Health Officer and CDHD staff the authority to require that soil test holes, created for site assessments for on-site septic systems, remain open for up to two business days after the Health District is notified the hole has been dug, to allow CDHD staff to perform such assessments. Any licensed septic system installer or designer acting in compliance with this requirement is simply complying with the WAC.

The motion was approved unanimously. It was noted that this was the first reading of the motion, and that it is not adopted until a second reading occurs and the motion passes at the August Board of Health meeting.
